At a recent meeting the county commissioners had the court house, inil and contents insured for about $13,000 Henne & Lynn and Judge Weaver. Previously they had had the Oak in the association. Dale Park buildings insured for $2,000.

No doubt many of our readers well remember Ed. Cordler, a plasterer, who lived in Salina a few years ago. The following sad news of him was and best ever received in the county. Herald of the 28th.

Mr. J. E. Cordier, formerly of Denver, Colorado, where he owns some property, came to this city last fall with his wife and child, and estab-lished himself at 322 Spring street. He was a plasterer by trade and could have prospered in his business in this city, but it appears that for the past two months he has had a disease of two months he has had a disease of the brain that has prevented him from working at his trade and caused himimuch suffering. In his pain and angulah it seems that his reason be-came dethroned, and on Tuesday evening instead of going home he work to account of Singling stream and went to a store on Spring street and got a paper on which he wrote, "J. E. Cordier, plasterer, 822 Spring street," and then in the darkness of night hung himself from the scallbiding on the reat end of a new building being the "close district," and so unexpected on Spring street between the party, and a triumph over its foes in 1884. The Glickites are discomfited, the bolters are sore, the demagogues are down in the mouth. Funston is a straight-out Republican, and discreted on that issue. Hurrah for the Second District!
